This analysis allows for a deeper investigation of corporate finance theories. For example, we go beyond asking whether firms follow a financial pecking order (Myers and Majluf, 1984). We investigate whether the firms that most strongly support the implications of the pecking-order theory are also the firms most affected by informational asymmetries, as suggested by the theory. Survey-based ...

Financial economics is the branch of economics characterized by a "concentration on monetary activities", in which "money of one type or another is likely to appear on both sides of a trade". Its concern is thus the interrelation of financial variables, such as prices, interest rates and shares, as opposed to those concerning the real economy.
